Our school has organized a visit to one of the few museums dedicated to highlighting the contributions of people who have had great life stories, but who are not normally found in other museums. We have been waiting for this moment for months!

We arrive at the entrance of the museum and are waiting in the lobby for the guided tour to start, when suddenly, the security personnel start running and shouting that no one can leave the museum until the robbery is solved. We got a little scared: What robbery?! Our teacher decides to go find out what happened, and we follow her. We walk down a corridor and we see empty and looted rooms, some of them have showcases thrown away and with broken glass. We arrive at a door with a sign that says "Director". The teacher calls and opens the door. Inside there is a woman with some papers in her hand and with a face of great concern; she is the museum Director, who says:

-We had everything ready to inaugurate the "Visibles" exhibition today, with a streaming to the whole world, but... they robbed everything! The 15 biographies that make up the exhibition have been looted, as if someone wanted them to remain invisible forever. But they won't get away with it! We have a sheet with biographical data of each person, to reconstruct who it is in each room.

It seems that the matter has an easy solution. However, the Director explains the big problem:

-The difficulty is that the data is encrypted. The Head Curator of the museum wanted the exhibition to be a big surprise, even I was not informed of the content. The museum's Head Curator is out of town, but if you help us we can get the stories back. We need your help! We have her notebook, but you have to decipher her clues to solve the enigmas that are hidden in each encrypted sheet. In addition, apart from the enigmas, she always assigns a code to each biography, so it is necessary to decipher those codes in order to access the complete guide to the "Visibles" exhibition where all the information is.

We looked at each other and it didn't take us a minute to accept the challenge: let's get to work!

Suddenly, an alarm sounds and water starts to fall from the ceiling: with all the mess of people running, someone has activated the fire protection system by mistake. Next, a voice over the public address system warns that it is a false alarm, there is no need to worry. We return to our task, but... Oh, no! The sheets have gotten wet and the ink is beginning to rub off. We have a few minutes to get the data back and get everything set up for the world streaming. Otherwise, the "Visibles" exhibition will have to be suspended and those who committed the theft will have achieved their purpose, silencing 15 great life stories and keeping them invisible.
